

Special Author Visit Tues., Nov. 7

Kids' Votes Count Too!

This Election Day, when the citizens of New Jersey cast their vote for state governor, your child will learn what those job responsibilities are and how important it is to cast a vote.

That is when children's author Anita Iaco will visit Washington School to read her story, Let's Vote! A Fruitful Election Tale.

She will also talk about how a person campaigns for the job of governor and discuss what will happen when he/she takes office. Then she will let the students cast a vote just like the students do in her story.

About the Book

Set in an elementary school classroom, this story has the students in the class voting for their favorite fruit from among three tasty candidates: the apple, the orange, and the banana. While only one fruit wins, everyone learns how important it is to make promises you can keep, to tell the truth and to be nice.

The author is making personalized, signed copies of the book available to all families for a discounted price of $10 per book. If you would like to add this timely, hard-covered book to your child's personal library, complete the form below and return it to school with your payment by Friday, Nov. 3.

Number of Books: _____

Child's Name: _____

Child's Classroom: _____

If you would like additional books signed, or more than one child's name signed on the book, please indicate that on the reverse side. If paying by check, please make it out to Anita Iaco. Thank you.

Autographed books make great gifts.