May 2018

I find it hard to believe that we are entering the home stretch of the school year. The students have grown and developed into such purposeful learners! Your children have been working so hard to master the many new concepts, standards and many expectations put before them this year. They have now had eight months to practice and learn so many things. This is the time of year that we challenge them to demonstrate understanding of all their teachers have taught. All students are assessed for their mastery of reading fluency, comprehension, writing, math fluency, and math problem solving. Students in third and fourth grade also take the PARCC assessment to help reveal their progress toward the mastery of their expected grade level standards.

I encourage you all to teach your children how to self-reflect on their own strengths and weaknesses and realize that we all have both. Embrace and be proud of the success that finds you and work to improve in those areas that challenge.
